EXECUTIVE INTERVIEW QUESTIONS

Questions that reveal the operating model.

Not generic “culture” questions. These are designed to uncover how Bravo wins, where Directors lose leverage, and what excellent engagement leadership actually looks like.

01 Where do otherwise strong Directors most often lose leverage across multiple clients?

Follow-up: Is the failure mode usually prioritization, delegation, client boundary-setting, data quality, or delayed escalation?

02 Which parts of the 225+ brand playbook are truly standardized, and where do you deliberately resist standardization?

Follow-up: What is a recent example where applying a familiar pattern would have been the wrong answer?

03 What changes between a successful $3M client engagement and a successful $20M client engagement?

Follow-up: Where does the Director's time move as complexity and internal team maturity increase?

04 How do you know, early, that a client engagement is drifting toward disappointment?

Follow-up: Which leading indicators matter before renewal risk is visible?

05 When a founder wants strategy but daily operations are unstable, how do you expect the Director to reset the engagement?

Follow-up: Who owns the conversation when the real work needed is different from the client's original framing?

06 How do you distinguish a Director who is developing junior operators from one who is simply using them as capacity?

Follow-up: What behaviors show up in the best Director/Manager or Director/Associate pairings?

07 Where do client team-hour economics most often get away from a Director?

Follow-up: What practices protect both client value and Bravo margin without making the relationship feel transactional?

08 What would make you say, after 90 days, “Russ is operating like a Bravo Director”?

Follow-up: What evidence would matter most - client trust, results, team leverage, playbook adoption, judgment, or something else?
